The uncrowned king' is disgusted with the turn of affairs, and perhaps anxious to get rid of the burdens of an office that becomes more resome as time progresses. His ambition has suffered cruel disappointments, and it looks very much as if the magic of his name is a thing of the past. CURRY Says:

"In the crusade against free schools we sometimes hear them satirized as charity schools or designed mainly for the indigent. This is proof of a low and incorrect view of State systems of public instruction, because education is a paramount duty of the State and 'a debt due from the present to future generations.' The people have a right to the privilege, and it is the solemn obligation of a State to guard and maintain that right. The nature and necessities of man demand the fullest public development of mental powers, and the success of the individual, the success of the individual, the success of the individual, the success of the individual the success of the individual, the success of the state alike roquire that this development should be universal. This seasontial end or result, experience has demonstrated can be attained only, or even approximately, through a well-sustained system of government schools. Universities, colleges, academies, denominational and private effort, however wise and liberal and neritorious, have failed utterly to accomplish general education. A system carefully devised, supported by general and local taxation, based on the safe economic and political principle that in a freer representative government the education of the children to a limited extentive success.

triple alliance. What else was to have been expected? Even if "the long pending negotiations with the Porte," as the cable puts it, had not resulted in a formal understanding at the present time, it was a foregone conclusion that in case of war between Russia and the allied trio, Turkey would be compelled for her own safety to side with the latter. Every now and then Turkey makes a show of independence and of acting upon her own volition, but the world knows just own volition, but the world knews just what estimate to put upon that.
